

Age of Exploration

In 1502 Columbus became the first European to encounter chocolate. His encounter with chocolate and its later adoption by Europeans demonstrates the influence of exploration on the world. At times the pursuit of the unknown has been for survival, ideas, greed, or curiosity. During the semester students will study the impact of local discoveries (such as chocolate or silver) on a global scale. The course can count as a non-western elective on teaching and non-teaching programs.
